Modernization of the chicken production system: adoption and application of the health-related performance standards. In the course of the modernization program of the United Kingdom's chicken production system, the adoption and use of the Health-

Related Performance Standards was chosen as a policy goal. The policy objectives were to improve the food safety and quality of birds. Using the recent literature, the HRS were compared to other performance standards and their adoption and use were analyzed. The HRS were formally adopted in the UK in 1994 and had been available to farmers in some form since 1997. In 1999, the UK's first batch of chickens were produced to HRS standards. Key elements of the UK's
