Cancer is a disease of aging, with lung cancer being the leading cause of cancer death worldwide. Tumor mutational burden (TMB) is a good indicator of the sensitivity to anti-cancer treatment with immunotherapy.

Chemotherapy resistance after primary surgery in lung cancer patients is also frequently observed, and the molecular mechanism is not well elucidated. Therefore, we aimed to examine the significance of Tumor Mutational Burden-1 (TUMT-1) in lung cancer progression and/or chemoresistance and explored the potential mechanisms that TUMT-1 regulates signaling pathways. In this study, we found that TUMT-1 is significantly upregulated in lung adenocarcinoma (LUAD).
