Apple's announcement came shortly after a U.K.-based law firm launched an initiative to challenge the EU/tax treaty in a bid to deter other companies from paying the same rate as Apple. The firm's international tax challenge, which is being led by London-based law firm Garden Court, is to seek assurances from the EU that Apple will be charged at a rate closer to 15 percent rather than the company's current tax rate of 12 percent. The firm also plans to ask for the tax to be made retroactive to when the firm was first charged. Apple has already been accused of using "tax avoidance" techniques by some EU members, and is now planning to take legal action to protect its tax bill. "In 2012 the EU Commission decided to investigate Apple for its
