TFTP (Transferred File Transfer Protocol) is a protocol that allows for the transfer of files over a serial link or physical connection, also called a "line" or "path." TFTP is commonly used for booting. On the 10th of May, in an email from Transmission developer Bram Cohen to his clients, he notes So now you have a standard server routine for setting up a TFTP server, it's nothing more than a teensy tiny bit of code. The idea is to write a simple bash script that runs on the server that looks for the file and then kicks off the transfer, just like you would with SCP. But from the client it's as simple as running mkdir /data/bt/incoming cp foo.bin /data/bt/incoming That's all there is to it. You'll have to provide the file, as well as the name of the tftp server. I'll go and get the code up now. :/tmp$./bt_tftp.sh foo.bin flesystem 2.1 : Starting from C Dr Frappe: There are many libraries, but I find Getopt the most useful since it can be used in a wide variety of programming languages. 2.2: Starting from Python GNU Midnight Commander (GnuMC) is a File Manager and File Transfer Program similar to Midnight Commander (Midnight, mcedit, mc) for Windows/Windows/OS X. mc is a clone for the original os from the BSD project. Great, it looks like the client is ready to go. Hopefully the server will be soon, but that is for another post. EDIT: Ok so it looks like the team have resolved the issue 6d1f23a050
